Even though it was formed in 1887 concentrating mainly upon professional shorthand, Intersteno has been able to keep pace with the technological and social changes brought about in more than one century

Since its beginning Intersteno had a world-wide vision, inviting people all over the world to join

Its interests are not linked to a specific professional status. Intersteno gathers teachers as well as professional reporters, secretaries and parliamentary reporters

In 1993 the Intersteno Parliamentary Reporters' Section (IPRS) was set up within the framework of Intersteno

The aim of IPRS is to enable parliamentary reporters to co-operate via a professional organization for improving the services they provide to parliaments

New technology revolutionizes the traditional methods of producing and publishing the verbatim reports

Through the years IPRS has proved to be a very interesting forum for all kind of professional reporters, specifically parliamentary and court reporters

IPRS has a long and deep experience in reporting techniques and reporting and is willing to sustain those countries that aim to develop parliamentary reporting services by sharing best practices and know-how
